Carly studied Politics and International Development Studies at the University of Winnipeg. She participated in the Odyssey program, which took her to a small town in Quebec. There, she taught English in an elementary school and became fluent in French.

“You want our heart, as well as our mind.”

Carly completed her law degree at the University of Ottawa, which included internships at the Treasury Board Secretariat of Canada and a non-profit organization that facilitates access to justice for persons with disabilities. She was a caseworker at the university legal clinic, representing survivors of child and domestic abuse in their claims for compensation.

Upon graduation in 2015, Carly articulated at the national office of a large union, providing support for internal union matters and policy development, arbitrations and matters before labour boards.

Since returning to Winnipeg, her hometown, she has practiced immigration and refugee law, family law, administrative law and human rights. Carly is excited to focus on labour and employment law.

In her spare time, Carly enjoys spending time with friends and family, attending concerts and enjoying the arts, practicing yoga and volunteering.
